“ After coming to this site probably 100 times at least since Laura's passing I think I'm finally able to collect my thoughts enough to put something down on here about our friendship and how special Laura was to me. Laura was my best friend. Honestly there are not words that could accurately describe our friendship or the depth of how amazing Laura was. It's impossible to describe Laura using just words because Laura as a friend was a feeling. Being friends with Laura and being around her daily was like being in a permanent hug total comfort and total acceptance. The feeling you get when you feel like everything is going to be okay. That's what I love the most about her she had a special way of just seeming to understand. She never would make me talk about things on my mind instead she just would tell a story about her own life that perfectly related to whatever I was going through without me ever even telling her a single thought. It's just who she was. We struggle together through ups and downs relating through silent tears just knowing each other's hearts and knowing we were going to be just fine as long as we had each other to carry us through. I've carried Laura and Laura has carried me many many days. She's rescued me from myself a million times over and honestly she still does. We used to laugh so hard together and usually we didn't even remember why. I guess I just don't know how to even explain it but I miss her and I think I always but I keep on laughing and talking to her as though she's here with me and I really think that she is. She's with her son's she's watching her grandbabies she's looking over her mother her sister and I know she's looking over me. We always said that we want to go without the other but she did she went without me but I got to trust that she's free and she'll be waiting on the other side for me. I love you forever bestie ❤️ 🎵🎵🎵 "lightning and the thunder 🥹🎵🎵🎵

“ I will always remember Laurie being a kind loving mom to her two young boys, working hard & going to school. Buying her first home to raise her family, and being a good older sister too, helping her buy a car when she needed a little help. She had a good heart and I pray she rests in peace.
